Q2. Read the following passage carefully and answer the given questions. (CLO-2) (16 marks)

Life today is governed by the offshoots of science. We have many new comforts of life that our forefathers did not possess. Should we jump to the conclusion that we are really happier than our forefathers were? It is a very puzzling question. Let us first see what kind of life they led.

wes before technology

The world of our forefathers was different from that of today. They lived in villages. Scientific inventions were not made. There were no planes, cars, movies, radios, etc. T.V. mobile phones, or the internet were not invented. There was no electricity so they were deprived of all those comforts which we now enjoy with the help of electricity. They moved in jolting, slow-moving carts or carriages. Life was simple. They were engaged in tilling the soil for a living. There were many cool and sheltered spots for innocent pleasures. They took active part in all sorts of simple and innocent games. Contentment and happiness prevailed.

Lues after technology In our modern age, life is full of comforts and luxuries. We wonder how our forefathers lived without them. These are the blessings of science. We can travel in railways, airplanes, ships, cars, and motorbikes and many more vehicles like them. The old days of trouble and difficulties have come to an end. In every walk of life we have begun to use electricity. Medical science has done a great service to man. Even the most serious diseases are cured very easily. We have comfortable homes, fine schools, hospitals and many other amenities of life. Modern age and lack of morality

The point is we still feel doubt if we are really happier than our forefathers. Material civilization has no doubt made a wonderful stride but the moral development of man has been totally neglected. It has nothing to do with happiness, goodness, beauty, courage, adventure, journey, friendship, love, etc. All these values are necessary for a happy life. Scientific development has out-stripped our spiritual or moral progress.

We are living in an age where we admire richer ones more than those who have spiritual power, and long for luxury of the body than peace of mind. This age of materialism will not be happy till there is an emphasis on the old moral values taught by our forefathers. True happiness is the state of mind that can be better attained in the cottage than in the king's palace. (No. of words: 392)
